1. #23375 attend a conference 高频 机经题

疑似原文

回忆不全，待补充

A tutor and two students are discussing whether to attend a conference this summer.

Tutor

Both of you are planning to attend the conference this summer, but I don't think it is a good idea at this stage. Neither of you has enough experience yet. I would suggest that you do a poster presentation as observers this time, and you can still get the feedback you want.

Student 1

We were actually hoping to have a joint presentation at the conference. We really want to get feedback from a wider audience. But I think a poster presentation is still a good option, and we are willing to prepare for it.

Student 2

There are some common points in our study, and our research is still at an early stage. So I agree that a poster presentation might be a good idea. I think I will make a proposal to you before making the final decision about attending the conference.

参考答案

Tutor

Thinks students lack experience for a full presentation.

Recommends doing a poster presentation to gain feedback.

Student 1

Initially prefers a joint presentation for wider feedback.

Accepts poster presentation as a good alternative.

Student 2

Agrees their research is still at an early stage.

Supports doing a poster presentation and plans to seek tutor approval before deciding.

2. #23374 joining or starting a student club 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Three students are discussing which student club to join next semester.

Speaker 1

Hey, I' ve been thinking about joining a club next semester, but I' m not really sure which one to choose. Do you guys have any suggestions on what I should join? I want something interesting, but also something that' s actually worth my time.

Speaker 2

Honestly, I think it really depends on your interests. You should choose something you genuinely enjoy, otherwise it' s hard to stay committed. And you know, if you can' t find a club that fits you, you could even start your own club. That way, you can shape it exactly the way you want.

Speaker 1

Start my own club? That sounds a bit challenging. I' ve never really thought about that before.

Speaker 3

Actually, I joined the debate club last year, and it' s been a great experience. But I have to say, running a club—or even being actively involved—does require quite a lot of organization. There are usually different roles, like a president, a vice president, event coordinators, and people responsible for promotion and logistics. Everyone has their own responsibilities to keep things running smoothly.

Speaker 2

Exactly. That's why starting your own club can be rewarding, but it also comes with a lot of responsibility. You need people to manage different aspects, and it takes time to build everything from scratch.

Speaker 3

Yeah, in the debate club, we also have regular training sessions, internal competitions, and even external tournaments. Some people focus on preparing arguments, while others help organize events or manage the team. It's quite structured, and that's why it works so well.

Speaker 1

Hmm, hearing all that, I think starting my own club might be too much for me. I'm not really prepared to take on that kind of responsibility. I guess I'd rather just join an existing club instead of creating one from scratch.

Speaker 2

That's totally fine. Joining an established club is definitely easier, and you can still gain a lot from it without the pressure of managing everything.

Speaker 3

Yeah, and you can always try a few different clubs at the beginning of the semester. Most clubs have trial sessions, so you can see what suits you best before committing.

Speaker 1

That sounds like a good plan. I'll probably start by exploring a few options and then decide from there.

中文解析

参考答案

Speaker 1

Unsure which club to join and wants something interesting and worthwhile.

Finds starting a club too challenging and prefers joining an existing one.

Plans to try different clubs before deciding.

Speaker 2

Believes students should choose clubs based on personal interests.

Suggests starting a new club as an option, though it requires effort and responsibility.

Thinks joining an existing club is easier and still beneficial.

Speaker 3

Shares positive experience in the debate club with structured activities and roles.

Emphasizes that clubs require organization and teamwork.

Recommends trying trial sessions to find the most suitable club.

3. #23373 opening event of new student union 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Three speakers attended the opening event of a new student union.

Speaker 1

So, what did you guys think about the opening event of the new student union? I thought it was quite lively—there were so many people, and the atmosphere was really energetic.

Speaker 2:

Yeah, I went as well. It was definitely impressive. The old library is pretty good too, but the new student union is indeed nice.

Speaker 3:

I actually couldn't make it to the opening event because I had another commitment that day. I missed the opening event, but I'm there every day and I really like the new student union. It has a lot of clubs, which is one of the reasons I like it. I've already checked out a couple of them, and they seem really welcoming.

Speaker 1:

That's true, there are so many opportunities to get involved. Personally, I'm also quite impressed by the facilities. I like the new student union because it has retail shops. You can grab food, buy things you need, and just hang out between classes without having to go far.

Speaker 2:

I can see why you'd like that, but honestly, I actually think it's too noisy. Since we're close to the city center, the retail shops in the new student union aren't really necessary. I'd prefer a quieter study environment. Sometimes I just want a peaceful place to concentrate, and it feels a bit overwhelming there.

回忆不全，待补充

Three students are discussing their cooking habits.

Speaker 1

Hey guys, I want to know how often you cook. And do you cook all by yourself? I mean my mom texted me because she's worried that I might not be eating properly.

Speaker 2

Well, I'm really into cooking—I see it as a social activity. Since I live with my roommate, we often cook together and learn something new from each other's special recipes.

Sometimes we even host friends at home so they can try out our dishes. On most days, we take turns cooking so neither of us has to cook meals every single day, which saves a lot of time.

Speaker 3

Emm, I really don't have much time to cook every day, so I decided to meal prep on weekends. In this case, I often cook in a big batch so I can bring the food that I've prepared with me during the workweek.

Speaker 1

You both have such good plans! Actually, I've already learned how to make some simple meals all by myself. But my mother is still worried about my eating habits. She keeps reminding me to maintain a balanced diet, eat more slowly, and explains the difference between healthy food and junk food.

中文解析

Feels concerned about maintaining a healthy diet due to family reminders.

Speaker 2

Enjoys cooking as a social activity with a roommate.

Shares cooking duties and sometimes hosts friends, making it efficient and enjoyable.

Speaker 3

Has limited time to cook daily.

Prefers meal prepping on weekends to save time during the week.

5. #23371 environment friendly 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Three students are discussing how to make the university more environmentally friendly.

Speaker 1

Hey guys, do you have any ideas on how to make our campus more eco-friendly? Honestly, we have a lot of room for improvement.

Speaker 2

Well, I think we could encourage students to ride bikes. It creates dual benefits—not only more eco-friendly, but also great for their physical health.

Speaker 3

That's a valid point, but since many students already own bikes, encouraging them further might have limited impact. Instead, let's propose establishing a shared bicycle station. This way, we can serve the majority who don't have their own bikes—like freshmen or visitors. Plus, students can easily pick up a bike at one spot and drop it off at another, making green transport truly accessible to everyone.

Speaker 1

That's a fantastic idea, especially since so many students are constantly rushing between lectures. A shared bike station solves this perfectly. Students can grab a bike instantly, cut their travel time in half, and arrive at class just on time.

Speaker 2

Absolutely, cutting down travel time is key and it also further promotes more students to act environmentally friendly. Do you have any other ideas besides this that can make our campus more sustainable?

Speaker 3

Well, building on that, we should also install recycling stations at key spots around the university. This way, students can instantly recycle their plastic bottles right after buying a drink, instead of throwing them in the general trash. It's a simple change that encourages daily eco-habits and significantly reduces campus landfill waste.

Speaker 1

I agree with you! And we need to encourage students to feel like an integral part of this green community, motivating even more of them to actively join the eco-friendly movement.

The goal is to shift the mindset to real actions that can drive mass participation and make this project truly successful.

中文解析

Speaker 2

Suggests promoting cycling as an eco-friendly and healthy option.

Agrees that reducing travel time can encourage sustainable behavior.

Speaker 3

Proposes shared bike stations to increase accessibility for all students.

Suggests adding recycling stations to reduce waste and promote daily eco-habits.

6. #23370 sociology conference 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Two students and a tutor are discussing their presentation at a sociology conference.

Tutor

Hey, I was just thinking about you two attending the sociology conference next week—I'm really excited for you! So, how's your preparation going?

Student 1

Actually, we were thinking of doing a joint presentation at the conference. We feel our topics overlap quite a bit, and presenting together might make for a stronger session.

Student 2

Yeah, even though our topics are a bit different, there are actually quite a lot of common points in our study, so we thought it would be great to share ideas and build on each other' s work.

Tutor

Well, to be honest, I have a few reservations because neither of you has the experience—it can be quite challenging. But since you're set on doing a joint presentation, here' s what I suggest: let' s organize a practice presentation. I' ll sit in as an observer, and we can invite a few other students to join the audience. That way, you' ll get the constructive feedback you need before the real conference.

Student 1

That sounds like a great plan! We' re definitely going to prep a practice presentation. We' re really eager to get your feedback, because we know it' ll help us deliver a much stronger presentation at the actual conference.

Student 2

Yeah, a practice presentation is definitely a great idea. Actually, I was planning to get your approval before making the final decision to attend the conference anyway. So, this session aligns perfectly with my original plan. Plus, since our research is still in the early stages, getting that feedback now would be really valuable for us.

Planned to seek tutor approval and supports practice session.

Tutor

Has concerns due to students' lack of experience.

Suggests a practice presentation with feedback from peers.

Aims to help them improve before the actual conference

7. #23369 lunch after study 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Three students are discussing what to have for lunch after study.

Speaker 1

Hey, guys! We' ve been working on our assignment in front of the computer for almost three hours. I don' t know about you, but I' m absolutely starving right now! How about we head to the school cafeteria? It has nice coffee and some food, and it' s the only nearby place if we want to get something to eat as soon as possible.

Speaker 2

Honestly, I' m very hungry as well, and I don' t mind what we eat. I' m fine with anything as long as I can fill my stomach.

Speaker 3

Oh, I really don' t want to go to the campus cafeteria. The food there always tastes terrible. Lots of students have complained about it. How about going to a shop just outside campus instead? It' s not too far away, and the food there is pretty tasty.

Speaker 2

I don' t really mind how the food tastes, but that store you mentioned is about a 15 minute walk away. I' m just really hungry and I want to eat as soon as possible.

Speaker 1

I' m sorry but I definitely won' t go there! I tried their coffee before, and it was really awful. I ordered a cup there last week, and I only took one sip before giving up on it.

Speaker 3

Alright then. Let's just go to the school cafeteria. I know the food isn't the best, but at least they have turkey sandwiches, so I can just order one for lunch.

Speaker 1

Even though the food in the school cafeteria isn't great, after all, they make really good coffee, which is exactly what I need right now.

中文解析

回忆不全，待补充

Three students are discussing the new timetable for this semester.

Speaker 1

Hey, guys! Have you checked out the timetable for the new semester yet? I just looked at mine this morning, and I found my schedule is really full this term. I've got several early morning classes, which means I have to get up really early almost every day.

Speaker 2

Yeah, I' ve also switched to a new timetable this semester. Most of my classes start at 9 a.m., and I have to say I really don' t like this arrangement. I always feel so tired and sleepy in the morning, so I definitely need a cup of coffee before class to wake myself up, otherwise I can' t focus at all.

Speaker 3

Oh, well. I' ve checked my timetable, and it' s quite different from both of yours. I don' t have any very early morning classes; most of my classes are scheduled in the afternoon, which I really prefer.

Has a very busy timetable with many early morning classes.

Finds it difficult to wake up early every day.

Speaker 2

Also has early classes and dislikes starting at 9 a.m.

Feels tired in the morning and relies on coffee to stay focused.

Speaker 3

Has mostly afternoon classes.

Prefers this schedule and finds it more comfortable.

9. #23331 different teaching styles 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Two students and a professor are discussing how different lecturers teach at the university.

Speaker 1 :

It's always so interesting how different teaching styles are here. I really like lecturers who make their classes interactive, like Professor Evans, who always lets us ask questions during the lecture. It just feels so much more interesting than someone just reading from slides, you know?

Speaker 2 :

I understand that preference, Sarah. As professors, we often have to balance giving you the main information with encouraging discussion. And sometimes a more direct approach is necessary, especially for basic topics. Also, we need to think about different learning styles; some students really learn best from information that's given clearly and in a structured way before they start debating.

Speaker 3 :

That's true, Professor. But I've noticed that lecturers who connect the theory to real-world examples are the ones where the information really sticks. Like Dr. Chen in our marketing class, she always shares case studies and recent examples from the industry. It makes the difficult ideas so much easier to understand and remember.

Speaker 2 :

Ah, yes, Dr. Chen's way of teaching is great for subjects that are more practical. We try to encourage that in all departments, but it can be hard for very theoretical subjects, like pure maths or some philosophy courses. For those, the focus might be more on critical thinking and solving abstract problems, which needs a different teaching style.

Speaker 1 :

I guess that makes sense. Still, I wish more lecturers would use technology to make things more lively. Some are brilliant with online quizzes and interactive polls during classes, which is a great way to check if we understand. Others just upload a PDF and that's it; it feels a bit dated now, doesn't it?

Speaker 3 :

Absolutely! Using online learning platforms for group projects, or even just a well-organised discussion board, can make a huge difference. It takes the learning beyond the lecture hall, letting us really get into the material and talk to each other at our own pace. It's not just about giving out information anymore.

Speaker 2 :

You're both right about how much technology can help, and we're seeing more people using it every year. But, it takes a lot of time to create those interactive things, especially when we also have research work. There's also the problem of making sure everyone has equal access to the tools and knows how to use them well.

Speaker 1 :

That's fair. But even small things, like quick feedback on assignments or clearer information about what's expected, make a huge difference. Some lecturers respond really quickly and are easy to talk to, while others feel totally disconnected. That connection really affects how motivated I feel.

Speaker 3 :

Exactly! In the end, it's about finding a balance that works for different learning styles and makes us feel supported. A mix of clear structure, interesting interactive parts, and feedback that's easy to get seems like the best teaching style. It's a tough job, but the best lecturers really manage to pull it off.

中文解析

参考答案

Speaker 1

Prefers interactive lectures with questions, technology, and quick feedback.

Believes these methods make classes more engaging and motivating.

Speaker 2

Explains that lecturers must balance structured teaching with discussion.

Notes that different subjects and learning styles require different teaching methods.

Speaker 3

Emphasizes the value of real-world examples and online learning tools.

Believes effective teaching should combine structure, interaction, and support.

10. #23330 gap year 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Three students are discussing whether students should take a gap year after graduation.

Speaker 1 :

Have you guys thought about what you'll do right after graduation? I've been looking into taking a gap year—maybe travel or do some volunteering. I think it's a great chance to gain real-world experience and figure out what I really want before jumping into a career or further study.

Speaker 2 :

I totally support that! A gap year isn't just a break—it's a time to grow and explore things outside the classroom. You learn independence, meet different people, and it looks great on your CV too. It could really help you stand out later.

Speaker 3 :

Actually, I'm not so sure. I feel like taking a whole year off might make it harder to get back into studying or working later. You could lose momentum, and let's be honest—it can be expensive. I think it's better to keep moving forward once you graduate. Staying in an academic or professional environment helps maintain a routine that's difficult to rebuild after a long break.

Speaker 1 :

That's a fair concern, but a gap year doesn't have to be unproductive. You can work part-time, learn a language, or do an internship abroad. It's all about planning it well so you're still building skills. Structured programs like teaching English or joining environmental projects can provide both purpose and practical experience.

Speaker 2 :

Exactly. It doesn't mean stopping completely—it's about gaining different kinds of experiences. Plus, not everyone is sure about their path at graduation. This way, you return more focused and motivated.

Speaker 3 :

I see your point, but I still think there's a risk. What if you can't find a good opportunity? Or you end up wasting time? I believe it's safer to continue with further studies or start a job while everything is fresh. Without a solid plan, it's easy to lose a whole year without much to show for it, which could put you behind your peers.

Speaker 1 :

Maybe it depends on the person. With proper planning and a clear goal, it can be really valuable. Not everyone does it just to relax—some use it to clarify their long-term plans. It's all about making it meaningful. Setting specific objectives, like achieving fluency in a language or completing a certification, can turn the year into a proactive investment in your future.

Speaker 2 :

Right. It's about using the time intentionally. And universities and employers increasingly value such experiences— they show maturity and initiative. That kind of experience can really set you apart.

Speaker 3 :

Okay, I guess if it's well-structured, it could work. Maybe I was being too cautious. It's not for me, but I understand why some people would choose it. Everyone has their own pace and path. If others have the resources and a clear plan, it might indeed offer benefits that a direct path doesn't provide.

中文解析

Speaker 1

Supports taking a gap year to gain real-world experience and clarify future goals.

Believes it can be valuable if it is well planned and skill-focused.

Speaker 2

Strongly supports gap years for personal growth and exploration.

Thinks the experience can improve independence and make students stand out on their CV.

Speaker 3

Is cautious about taking a gap year.

Believes it may waste time, cost money, and break academic or career momentum.

11. #23329 student clubs 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Three students are discussing whether to join student clubs next semester.

Speaker 1 :

Hey, have you guys thought about which clubs to join next term? I'm considering signing up for a couple—maybe the debate team and the photography society. I really want to meet people outside my major. Last year, joining the hiking club was amazing. I made so many friends during weekend trips!

Speaker 2 :

Actually, I've decided not to join any clubs this year. I was part of the dance club last semester, and it took up way too much time. Rehearsals were twice a week, often until late, and it started affecting my grades. I'd rather focus on my studies and maybe pick up a part-time job instead.

Speaker 3 :

I'm definitely joining at least one club! For me, it's not just about socializing—it's about building skills. I was in the robotics club last year, and I learned so much about project management and teamwork. Plus, it looks great on my CV.

Speaker 1 :

That's a good point. I also think clubs help you develop soft skills, like how to communicate better and work in a group. And it's not all serious; sometimes it's just fun. Like in the hiking club, we ended up telling stories around campfires. Those were my best memories from last year.

Speaker 2 :

I get that, but I often find club activities repetitive and poorly organized. A lot of time was wasted in meetings that could've been emails. I'd rather use that time to relax alone or hang out with a few close friends.

Speaker 3 :

I see what you mean, but I've had the opposite experience. The robotics club was super well-run, and we even got to compete nationally. It gave me a real sense of achievement. I don't think I would've had that opportunity if I hadn't joined.

Speaker 1 :

Exactly! It's all about finding the right club. I guess it depends on your interests and how the club is managed. But for me, the social and personal growth aspects are totally worth the time. It's really helped me become more confident and outgoing in general. Plus, being part of a community makes campus feel smaller and more like home.

Speaker 2 :

Well, I'm happy with my decision to sit this one out. I prefer having control over my schedule. Last year, I always felt rushed trying to balance club events with assignments. Sometimes saying "no" is the best way to protect your mental health and academic goals. Knowing your limits is just as important as pushing your boundaries.

Speaker 3 :

That's fair. But for anyone looking to gain more than just academic knowledge, I'd really recommend giving clubs a try. You might be surprised by what you can learn outside the classroom. Even just attending a few meetings can open doors to new interests and connections you never expected. It's not just about padding your resume-it's about discovering what you're truly passionate about.

Speaker 3

Strongly supports joining clubs to develop skills and gain experience.

Thinks clubs provide opportunities for teamwork, achievements, and career development.

12. #23328 the development of AI 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Three students are discussing the development of AI.

Speaker 1 :

Hey, have you guys been following all the buzz around AI lately? I'm honestly feeling pretty excited about it—especially with things like generative AI and how it's changing creative work. I've been experimenting with some tools, and it's amazing what you can create now. Last week, I even used AI to write code and design posters!

Speaker 2 :

I mean, sure, AI's great for getting certain things done—especially the simple, repetitive stuff. But when it comes to complex tasks that need real judgment or creativity? That's still on us. Humans bring understanding and context that AI just can't replicate.

Speaker 3 :

Honestly, I'm kind of worried. What if AI keeps taking over and there are fewer jobs out there? I mean, entry-level positions are already disappearing. I'm scared that by the time I graduate, there won't be much left for new grads like us.

Speaker 1 :

I wouldn't worry too much if I were you. Yeah, some jobs might disappear, but new ones always pop up—probably ones we can't even imagine yet. Think about it: a decade ago, who'd heard of AI prompt engineers or social media managers? There'll be tons of new roles created. We just have to stay adaptable and keep learning.

Speaker 2 :

Yeah, AI's definitely going to bring a lot of convenience. Imagine not having to deal with all those boring, repetitive tasks—it could handle the grunt work so we can focus on what actually matters. Honestly, I think it'll make life easier in ways we're just starting to see.

Speaker 3 :

Yeah, I totally agree there are benefits—like how AI saves so much time on repetitive tasks. For example, in healthcare, AI is helping doctors diagnose faster and more accurately. It's already making a real difference in ways we couldn't have imagined a few years ago.

13. #23327 new experience at university 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Three speakers are discussing the new experience at university.

Speaker 1 :

Hey everyone! Can't believe we've been at university for a month already. How's everyone feeling about it? I come from a small town where there wasn't much to do—mostly just watching movies or playing football with friends. But now that I'm here in the big city, everything feels so fresh and exciting.

Speaker 2 :

For me, university life hasn't brought any huge changes compared with my past life. I'm actually from a big city, so when I was in high school, my friends often organized all kinds of activities and gatherings. But I wasn't really the outgoing type. I seldom went out and didn't enjoy taking part in those social or entertainment activities very much.

Speaker 1 :

I totally get you. There are just so many activities going on, both on and off campus. After joining them, I often feel really worn out and don't have the energy to review my lessons, let alone finish my homework. I can only get a proper rest on weekends or during holidays.

Speaker 3 :

Well, I think the most important thing is to find a balance between university activities and study. I usually finish my urgent study tasks right after class before going out to have fun. That way, I never let my important work get delayed.

Speaker 2 :

Mine's a bit different! I usually hang out on weekdays and save homework, laundry and house chores for the weekends. Sometimes I'll go to my friends' parties on Saturday nights if there's one on, it's a nice little break!

中文解析

Speaker 3

Believes students should balance study and activities.

Prefers completing important study tasks first before going out to relax.

14. #23326 the noise in the library 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Two students are complaining to the library staff about the noise in the library.

Student 1 :

Excuse me, I' d like to complain about the noise in the library. Some people treat this place like a club instead of a study area. The library is supposed to be a quiet place for people to study, but there are always people chatting and watching videos here without putting their headphones on.

Staff :

Well, I'm aware of the situation you' ve complained about, but students' behavior is difficult to manage because the library is really big and there are only a few staff around. It' s hard for us to monitor everything. You know, the library does have a silent zone, so if you' re distracted by noise here, you can call security and they' ll help resolve the problem. But we can' t control the noise from other areas, like the computer section. Talking is allowed outside the silent zones.

Student 1 :

Well, in this case, may I offer you some suggestions? Why is it that people are required to keep quiet in the silent area, but talking isn't prohibited in the computer room? It seems a bit unfair to students who want to focus on studying, since the noise from the computer area can still be clearly heard and easily disturbs people nearby.

Staff :

You'd better write down your complaints and suggestions, because the university takes advice from students seriously. By writing down your experience clearly, the school can better understand the noise problems in the library and take more effective measures to improve the study environment for everyone.

Student 2 :

I also have something to complain about. I mean — can we bring food into the library? I often see students bringing all kinds of food to the study rooms and eating while they study. For example, some people bring strong-smelling food like instant noodles or takeout meals. These smells spread quickly in the library and make it really hard to concentrate. This is another big problem that influences our study environment.

Staff :

Food from outside is not allowed in the library. Even food without strong smells, like bread, is not permitted. The movements and sounds people make while eating can really disturb others who are studying. We' ve been strictly enforcing this rule, but some students still break it. If you' re bothered by this again next time, you can ask security for help.

Complains that many students talk and watch videos loudly in the library, disturbing others who want to study.

Suggests stricter rules because noise from areas like the computer section still affects nearby study spaces.

Staff

Explains that managing noise is difficult due to the large library and limited staff.

Suggests using silent zones, contacting security for disturbances, and submitting written feedback to the university.

Student 2

Complains about students bringing and eating food in the library.

Believes strong smells and eating noises disturb the study environment.

15. #23325 digital materials 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Three students are debating the value of traditional textbooks versus digital materials.

Speaker 1 :

Hey guys! I'm wondering what your thoughts are about digital materials. For me, I absolutely prefer physical textbooks. Last week I spent three hours staring at my screen reading journal articles, and my eyes were so strained that I had to stop. With a real book, I can highlight properly, write notes in the margins, and actually remember where I read things. Plus, I don't get tempted to check notifications every five minutes.

Speaker 2 :

Actually, I find digital resources way more efficient. All my readings are on my tablet—I don't have to carry around tons of books every day. The search function is a game-changer; I can find an article using a keyword in seconds instead of flipping through pages. And most e-books are cheaper, if not free from the university database.

Speaker 3 :

Well, I don't share the same experience with you. When I'm learning from a screen, I don't absorb the content as deeply. There's something about holding the book, turning the pages, even the smell—it helps me focus. Last month, my tablet died right before the tutorial, and I couldn't access any of the readings. With a physical book, you're never dependent on a battery or Wi-Fi.

Speaker 1 :

Exactly! And it's not just about reading—it's about reducing screen time. We already spend hours daily on laptops for assignments and lectures. Using paper books gives my eyes a break. Plus, it's easier to concentrate without pop-ups or the temptation to switch tabs.

Speaker 2 :

I see your point, but digital is just more practical. I can have all my resources for four different classes in one device. I don't have to worry about forgetting a book or damaging it. And with cloud backup, I'll never lose my notes or highlights. Plus, it's better for the environment—think of all the paper saved.

Speaker 3 :

That sounds ideal, but it doesn't work for everyone. I get distracted too easily when I'm online. Sometimes I end up on social media instead of studying. And annotation feels less personal—typing comments isn't the same as scribbling thoughts by hand. I definitely retain more when I read from paper.

Speaker 1 :

Same here. Maybe a mixed approach would work—using digital for quick access and physical books for deeper study. That way, we get the benefits of both.

Speaker 2 :

I guess that's reasonable. Though I'd still go all-digital if I could—it's lighter, faster, and more organized. But I understand it's not for everyone.

Speaker 3 :

I'd be okay with mixing, but I still believe physical books help me learn better. Some habits shouldn't be completely replaced by.

16. #23324 discussing draft assignments 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Two students and a tutor are discussing their draft assignments.

Student 1 :

Hi tutor, I' ve run into a really tricky problem while working on my essay. I always end up spending hours and writing way too much. But when I go back to check it, I still feel like it' s not enough—many key points aren' t covered, and my ideas aren' t clearly expressed.

Student 2 :

Oh, I totally agree with you! I always try to include every single detail of my ideas, and I end up almost exceeding the word limit.

Tutor :

Well, I totally understand your frustration. Maybe you just need to focus more on the context of the question. Trying to put every single detail in doesn' t ensure a high score. It' ll be all right as long as your ideas are well-organized and directly answer the question.

Student 1 :

I think repeating key points in the assignment is a useful way to show them as more important. But this leaves me no space to explain other ideas, and that's why my assignment scores are always low.

Tutor :

Well, the problem is mainly with your structure—keeping repeating the same points throughout your writing is a typical sign of an unclear structure. I suggest you start the assignment by making a clear draft before you write. Don't worry too much when doing the outline, though; this is only your first draft. You can revise it and reorganize your ideas, and then submit it once you've made those changes.

Student 1 :

Oh, I finally understand what you mean, tutor. I will plan my essay structure before I start writing. I will focus on the key points and use a clear, direct way to explain why they are important. In this way, I think I can successfully reduce repeated points that I was just explaining in different ways.

Student 2 :

Yeah, thank you so much for your advice, tutor. I really appreciate you listening to us patiently and giving us such clear and useful feedback.

17. #23323 new library 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Three students are discussing the new library at their university.

Speaker 1

Have you guys seen the new library on campus yet? It's absolutely stunning, right? I went there yesterday afternoon to check it out, and I was really impressed. The whole front of the building is a huge glass wall, which lets in lots of soft, natural light. It's way better than the old one.

Speaker 2

Oh, I know! I've been looking forward to its opening for months. I was so excited when I heard it finally opened last week. But honestly, I went there to study this morning and found it's really noisy inside. Students are always talking loudly in the hallways, and some even use laptops with loud keyboards. I might still choose to study at home.

Speaker 3

The new library is really nice, but I have a small complaint too—the meeting rooms are just too big, making it hard to have a quiet discussion. I really wish they had added more small meeting rooms, maybe for 3 to 5 people, so we can work on group projects or have discussions more comfortably.

Speaker 1

Yeah, speaking of complaints, I've noticed it's been really crowded these days. All the reading seats are taken, and there aren't any computers available if you arrive later than 10 am. But I think that's just because it's newly opened—everyone is curious and wants to check it out.

Speaker 2

You' re probably right about that. After all, the new library is still way better than the old one. The chairs in the old library were all worn out and really uncomfortable to sit on, while the new chairs are soft and have adjustable backs.

Speaker 3

Well, the other thing that bothers me a little is the artwork at the entrance. It' s really weird—I can' t even tell what it' s supposed to be. But other than that, everything else is perfect: clean, bright, and well-equipped.

Speaker 1

Really? I actually quite like that artwork! I think it' s pretty unique and creative. It adds a fun, modern touch to the library. I know it' s a bit strange, but maybe you just need to look at it a little longer to appreciate it. Overall, I' m really happy with the new library.

18. #23264 Free online courses 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Three teachers are discussing free online courses.

Speaker 1

Actually, I've been looking into the growth of free online courses lately and found that there are now many free online courses. It's impressive how many well-known universities offer free online courses nowadays.

Speaker 2

Yes! I think it is too good to be true. What about you? Do you think the free online courses offer benefits to students?

Speaker 1

Exactly! I think it's a very good idea, especially when you consider accessibility. Many people simply cannot attend traditional school because of their financial situation, so these courses can be a real benefit to those learners. But you know what, I've noticed a real gap between offering and uptake. Many students just do not take part.

Speaker 3

That's true. Because many students do not have time to take these free online courses. I suggest universities could reschedule these courses to other times to attract more outsiders to join.

Speaker 1

And you know what, I can hardly believe so few people who enroll see it through to the end.

Speaker 3

Yes, that happens a lot. Actually, those who have the desire to study are often the most likely to complete the courses. Some people are discouraged by the tedious coursework, as they discover that a large amount of work is required. Another reason for the low completion is that these courses are free, so students don't face any financial punishment.

Raises the question of their real value and effectiveness.

Speaker 3

Believes lack of time is a major reason students do not join or finish courses.

Suggests rescheduling courses to attract more learners.

Thinks low completion rates are due to heavy workloads and the fact that free courses lack financial consequences.

19. #23263 finish reading before class 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Three students are discussing how to finish reading before class.

Speaker1

Ugh, I don't know about you guys, but I think today's lecture was way too hard and I could barely keep up with what the professor was saying.

Speaker2

Yeah, I get what you mean. But honestly, I think it gets easier if you go through the reading list first. The professor mentioned those books for a reason. If you read them before class, the lecture will be much easier to follow.

Speaker1

Hmm, maybe. But the reading list is so long! I don't even know where to find all these books and articles!

Speaker3

Well, actually, it's pretty easy to find those books on the library website. They usually have all the course readings listed there, organized by week, and you can just search by title. Oh, and most of them have PDF previews, so you can flip through the contents to see which chapters the professor highlighted.

Speaker1

Oh, really? I didn't know that. I've been wasting time scrolling through random website pages. Most of them don't match what the professor talked about. I should have checked the library first instead of struggling with those.

Speaker3

It's totally fine—half the class didn't realize the library had all this stuff at first. And most importantly, if you get stuck, the librarian is super helpful. Last week, I couldn't find one of the recommended articles, and she showed me exactly how to access it online, using the library's archive database.

Speaker2

Oh that's useful! Thanks for sharing. And with all the reading materials available now, I'm more convinced that reading before class is important. If you read ahead, you're not going to fall behind during the lecture. And trust me, once you've read them, the lecture won't feel half as hard..

Speaker1

Yes, now that I know the library's that easy to use and the reading list actually lines up with the lectures. I'll go to check the library website tomorrow, and maybe talk to the librarian if I get lost.

Speaker3

Good plan. Once you get used to it, finding the readings is pretty quick. I used to spend hours stressing over it, but now I can pull up what I need in 10 minutes. Also you can bookmark the course page so you don't have to hunt for it every time.

Recommends bookmarking course pages to make pre-class reading faster and less stressful.

20. #23262 Final exams 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Three students are discussing preparing for final exams at university.

Speaker1

Oh man, I'm already feeling the pressure for finals. It feels like there's just so much to cover and, like, so little time. I'm trying to figure out the best way to deal with everything, especially for that quantitative methods exam. I really need to ace that one.

Speaker2

I know exactly what you mean, Will. I've started making detailed study schedules, blocking out specific times for each subject. For quantitative methods, I've found that doing past papers with a timer on really helps make the concepts stick. It's tough, but it helps you see your weak spots quickly.

Speaker3

That's a good strategy, Lily, but sometimes I find past papers just stress me out more if I'm not confident with the material first. I've been focusing more on active recall and spaced repetition, especially for my history courses. It's basically like quizzing yourself all the time, and then going back to topics after longer and longer periods. It feels like it helps more with remembering things.

Speaker2

Active recall is definitely effective for theoretical subjects. I should try using that more for my literature class. But for math, nothing beats just grinding through problems. Also, don't forget to, like, schedule in breaks. It's so easy to burn out if you're just studying non-stop. I try to do 50 minutes on, 10 minutes off.

Speaker1

Yeah, breaks are super important. I've also been thinking about starting a study group for the economics module. Sometimes explaining concepts to someone else helps me understand them better, and they can catch things I've missed. Plus, it breaks up the boringness of studying alone, which can get really isolating.

Speaker3

Study groups can be, like, tricky, though. I've been in groups where we spent more time chatting than actually studying, or someone just wants answers handed to them. You have to be really strict with yourselves about it. I prefer studying alone and then just checking in with friends for specific questions.

Speaker1

That's true, you need the right people and, like, a clear plan. We'd definitely need to set some rules, like focusing on specific chapters or problem sets. I think the key is to use it for reviewing difficult topics or quizzing each other, not for initial learning. It's also about keeping each other on track.

Speaker2

Beyond all the study techniques, I think it's just as important to look after yourself. I know it sounds a bit old-fashioned to say, but getting enough sleep and eating properly makes a huge difference in how much information you can actually remember. Pulling all-nighters just isn't good for the long term; you end up forgetting everything the next day anyway.

Speaker3

Totally agree, Lily. I made that mistake in my first year and really regretted it. Now, I make sure to shut down my laptop an hour before bed and do something relaxing, like reading. It helps clear my head. It's all about finding that balance between studying really hard and not burning out completely.

21. #23261 meeting place on campus 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Three students are discussing their project meeting place on campus.

Speaker1

I think we should meet in a conference room in the university library. We can conveniently borrow books we need right there while we work. It's a quiet space with plenty of resources, and we won't have to carry heavy books around later. Plus, the library has those small study rooms we can book if we need complete privacy.

Speaker2

I'm not so sure about that idea the library is always so crowded during this time of day. There will be too many people studying and chatting outside the rooms, and it will be very noisy even inside the conference areas. Last time I tried to study there, I could hardly concentrate with all the distractions. Maybe we should consider someplace else that's actually quiet.

Speaker3

I have a compromise-we can go to the library first to borrow all the books we need for our research in the morning. Then, we can catch up online. This way we get a quiet space to discuss in our own home.

Speaker1

I totally agree! In this way, we can search for resources online at any time! Let's find a coffee shop to sit down and make a perfect task plan! Which coffee shop were you thinking about? There are several near campus, but most tend to be quite busy. Maybe we should look for someplace less popular?

Speaker2

I like the idea, but I have to go back home around 4 PM to receive a package that's being delivered. I don't want to miss it, so it might make me a little late for the meeting. How about we meet at the coffee shop near the city center?

Speaker1

No, not that one. There are so many people and it's too crowded. What about that new place called "Sweet Treats"? It's a bit farther from campus, but I heard they have nice cakes and coffee. When you arrive, just find the long table on the first floor. We'll be there waiting for you.

Speaker3

OK! Let's pick this one! I've passed by Sweet Treats a few times it does look cozy because it usually has fewer people. Plus, who can say no to sweet treats while working, right? Oh, and just remember to call us when you go out of home so we know when to expect you. We can start without you and fill you in when you arrive. If anything urgent comes up, we can always hop on a quick online call to keep you in the loop.

Speaker1

Great, then it's settled! We'll meet at the library at 3 PM, get our books, then walk over to Sweet Treats to assign tasks and discuss the project outline. Don't forget to call us when you're on your way!

22. #23260 keep active at university 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Three students are discussing how to keep active at university.

Speaker 1

Hi everyone, I was thinking we should have a discussion about university activities. I've been considering getting more involved on campus, but I find that joining clubs is too expensive. The membership fees are really high, and when you add up all the costs throughout the semester, it becomes a significant amount. And that's not all - parking is expensive too, especially if you need to drive to campus regularly for activities. So I'm trying to figure out how to be active and social without spending too much money. I'd really like to hear your ideas to save money while still enjoying university life. What do you both think about this situation?

Speaker 2

That's a really good topic to discuss. From my perspective, I believe the university has many free facilities that students sometimes overlook. When I'm looking for activities, I prefer low-cost options that don't require much spending. A great option is swimming - the campus pool is accessible with our student ID. And sometimes, the simplest choice is just going for a walk around campus. I think these activities are relaxing and budget-friendly choices that don't put pressure on your finances. You can enjoy yourself without worrying about the cost.

Speaker 3

I completely understand where you're coming from. Personally, I feel my schoolwork is heavy with lots of assignments and classes this semester, so I need affordable ways to unwind. What works well for me is walking around campus, especially in the green areas. I find that walking and seeing green plants helps me relax and clear my mind after long study sessions. It's a simple pleasure that doesn't cost anything. Additionally, I also enjoy cooking in the kitchen - preparing simple meals helps me take a break from academic work and restore energy for the next day's study. These activities help me manage the workload without adding financial stress.

Speaker 1

Thank you both for sharing those suggestions. After hearing others' suggestions, I'm starting to see some good alternatives. Actually, I think I've decided to go to the university swimming pool as my main activity. It sounds like a healthy option that fits within my budget. Plus, I remember someone mentioning that the pool is Olympic-standard and professional, which makes it even more appealing. It's impressive that we have access to such a high-quality facility without extra cost.

Speaker 2

That sounds like an excellent decision. And since we're talking about making the most of this activity, I'd like to add one more suggestion: you could bring some snacks with you or drink a cup of coffee after swimming. This can make the experience more enjoyable and help you relax even further. It's still a budget-friendly approach, especially if you bring your own snacks from home or use your student discount at the campus café.

23. #23206 Write an 1500 word essay 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Three students are discussing how to write an essay.

Speaker 1

Hey, how's your first essay going? I've already finished mine.

Speaker 2

I'm planning to get it done over the weekend. It shouldn't be a big problem.

Speaker 3

Ugh, I'm not looking forward to it at all. Honestly, I don't even want to do it. Back in high school, I was not good at this kind of thing—and now in university, we have to write essays that are 1,500 words long! It feels impossible.

Speaker 1

The most important thing is to plan ahead. You should write notes on every idea that comes to mind. It only takes about ten minutes to jot things down, and even if it takes longer, that's fine—you're still working on your own time.

Speaker 2

Yeah, exactly. You can also use your laptop, but what I like to do is go to a café with just a pen and paper, order a coffee, and sit there thinking things through. You can write anything you can think of—the main thing is to keep yourself relaxed.

Speaker 3

That's a good idea. But my another problem is that I don't know how to start. I have no idea how to write an introduction.

Speaker 2

Actually, the best way is to write the rest of the essay first. Just leave space at the beginning, finish everything else, and then go back to the introduction once you know what you've written. The same technique also works for writing the conclusion.

Speaker 1

Yeah, that makes sense—I do that too sometimes. If you need help, maybe we can meet on Thursday. We can help you go through your essay plan—but don't worry, we won't write it for you!

Speaker 1:

So, have you guys thought about where to live for our final year?

Speaker 2:

Yeah, we' re planning to live off campus.

Speaker 1:

Oh, really? Why is that? I feel the opposite—I' m actually planning to move back into the school residence.

Speaker 2:

I get that. Living on campus is definitely nice—there are good facilities, entertainment, and plenty of support. Especially in the first year, I really needed that. But after two years, I feel like I want a change, so I' ve decided to go for a flat share.

Speaker 3:

Exactly. I also want a new environment and the chance to meet more people. And honestly, when it comes to exam season, I don' t want to be in the library surrounded by stressed-out students, all fighting for a quiet spot.

Speaker 1:

That makes sense, but you do need to be careful when choosing who to live with. In my last two years, I was in a flat share, and my roommate only wanted to party instead of study. I ended up having to shut myself in my room just to get any work done.

Speaker 2:

That won' t be a problem for me. Four of us—close friends—have already decided to share a flat together. We' re all really ambitious, we can study together and stay focused, and honestly, we usually manage to get top grades anyway.

Speaker 3:

Same here. I already have a friend renting a place off campus, and he' s invited me to join him. We' ve known each other for years, we get along really well, and we' ve even agreed to keep the place tidy by sharing cleaning duties.

Speaker 3:

I agree—he' s definitely the highlight of the year for me. But I have to admit, sometimes I feel a bit intimidated in his classes. I' m the type who likes to take questions away and research them later. Asking on the spot makes me worry that I' ll lose face. Do you think I should try to be more confident?

Speaker 1:

Honestly, his class is the perfect place to do that. You can both succeed and fail without anyone judging you. We should all try to keep a growth mindset—that's the only way to really benefit.

26. #23164 using AI to proofread papers 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Three students are discussing using AI to proofread their papers.

Speaker 1

Hey guys, have you ever thought about using AI for proofreading? I just got the feedback from my tutor on my essay, and she told me to do a proofread. I'm wondering if I can use AI for that, but I'm not sure if it's okay. It could probably help me find a lot of grammar and vocabulary issues. It might even suggest better ways to express my ideas.

Speaker 2

That's an interesting point, but wouldn't there be a significant risk of being accused of plagiarism if you use AI? Many universities are now implementing strict policies about AI-generated content. Even if you're just using it for proofreading, the line can get blurry - if the AI suggests substantial changes to your sentence structures or replaces too many of your original words, the final work might not truly be yours anymore. There's also the question of academic integrity - are we supposed to present work that's entirely our own creation?

Speaker 3

I understand your concern, but I don't really think it would go that far if used responsibly. After all, we often learn and use vocabulary from other sources like dictionaries, thesauruses, and sample essays all the time. Isn't that how we naturally expand our vocabulary and improve our writing? The key difference with AI is the scale and speed of suggestions, not necessarily the fundamental concept. Many professional writers use grammar checkers and editing tools regularly without it being considered plagiarism.

Speaker 2

I see what you mean, but I still think it's ultimately up to you and requires careful consideration. Different institutions and even different professors might have varying standards about what constitutes acceptable AI use. I'd be especially careful with major assignments or final papers. Maybe we should check our university's specific guidelines on AI assistance before making a decision?

Speaker 3

Actually, I've already been using AI on my tablet for proofreading for a while now. But, I still get asked by my teacher to do another proofread myself. I think the key thing is, you won't get any new ideas from AI. AI will only make your existing ideas clearer and more correct. It's really just an advanced tool that helps polish your work, not something that creates content for you. The fundamental thinking and ideas still need to come from you.

Speaker 1

Okay, I see. Thanks. I think I'll go back and ask my tutor about it first. I really don't want to be accused of plagiarism, especially since I'm not clear on where the line is drawn. It's better to be safe and get proper guidance rather than risk any academic consequences.

27. #23163 Use of mobile phones in lectures 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Three tutors are discussing the use of mobile phones in lectures.

Speaker 1

Okay team, let's talk about something that's been bothering me. What do you think of students using mobile phones in lectures? Honestly, it drives me crazy.

Speaker 2

Well, actually, I feel okay with students using a mobile phone in my class. Firstly, some students use their phone to record the lecture, which can be really helpful for reviewing later. Secondly, we have many international students whose English isn't perfect; they often need to quickly check words or translations during the lecture to keep up.

Speaker 1

I know, I get what you're saying, but in my experience, they always seem to get distracted and start chatting with friends on their phones instead of paying attention. You never really know what they're actually doing on there.

Speaker 3

I see both sides, but I think it's not necessary to put a full ban on mobile phones in lectures. Sometimes, I will even ask my students to use their phones for in-class activities, like polls or quick research, to make the lesson more interactive.

Speaker 2

That's a good point. Maybe we could have a meeting—a lunch meeting on Tuesday, perhaps—to discuss this further and share best practices?

Speaker 1

Yes, I agree. This is a broader issue. We should also bring this idea to the next department conference and try to think of a clear, fair policy with the whole department.

28. #23162 Commuting to the university 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Three students are discussing the commuting to the university.

Speaker 1

I'm really frustrated with my commute. I take the train every day, but it's always late! The train company does nothing to improve the service. I even take the first train each morning, but I still manage to be late for class. I'm considering buying a car, but they're just too expensive. I might need to take on more part-time work to afford one.

Speaker 2

I understand your frustration. I take the bus to campus, and the roads around the university are always so crowded that I often end up being late too. But the good thing about public transport is that I can use the time productively - I often read articles on my way to school. It helps me prepare for classes or just catch up on reading.

Speaker 3

That's why I prefer riding my bike to school. It's great exercise, and I don't have to worry about train delays or traffic jams. I can always predict exactly how long my commute will take, and I arrive feeling energized from the ride. Plus, it's much cheaper than any other option.

Speaker 1

That does sound convenient, but I live too far away to bike. I guess each option has its advantages and disadvantages. Maybe I should look into carpooling instead of buying my own car.

Speaker 2

Actually, that's a good idea. Carpooling could be a solution that's both affordable and reliable. We could even create a carpool group with other students who live in our area.

Speaker 3

Exactly! And for shorter distances, maybe you could combine biking with public transport? Many trains and buses have bike racks these days.

29. #23161 Online versus in-person classes 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Three students are discussing online versus in-person classes at university.

Speaker 1

Honestly, I think online classes are just way more convenient, you know, especially if you have a part-time job. You can totally fit your lectures around your own schedule, and there's no wasted time commuting at all. Plus, it's great if you like learning on your own, 'cause you really have to be disciplined.

Speaker 2

Yeah, I get why it's convenient, but I really miss the in-person stuff. Like, it's so much easier to just ask questions straight away in a lecture, and group discussions feel way more natural face-to-face. And also, the vibe on campus just feels more, you know, helpful for learning.

Speaker 3

Yeah, I totally agree with Liam. I mean, online is flexible, but I've just found it really hard to stay focused sometimes, you know? There are just so many distractions at home, and I feel a bit, like, cut off from my classmates and teachers. It's super easy to fall behind if you're not always checking emails and those platforms.

Speaker 1

That's a fair point about distractions, but honestly, for me, the flexibility is just way more important. I can re-watch lectures if I miss something, which, you know, you can't do in a live class. And also, for quieter students, being able to join online forums can be way less scary than speaking up in a big lecture hall.

Speaker 3

Yeah, re-watching lectures is definitely a big plus. But I also feel like you really miss out on those spontaneous chats and, like, meeting people on campus. Those informal talks after class or in the library are super valuable for making connections and understanding different viewpoints, you know?

Speaker 2

Exactly! The social side is just huge, isn't it? University isn't just about, like, the lessons; it's about the whole experience. You can build study groups way more easily, and getting immediate feedback or if you need something explained, it's just simpler when you're in the same room as your professor.

Speaker 3

I guess, like, a hybrid model might be the best idea then. You could have some lectures online for flexibility, but keep workshops, labs, and tutorials in-person. That way, we get the best of both worlds without completely losing out on the campus experience.

Speaker 1

Yeah, a hybrid approach sounds pretty reasonable. I mean, at the end of the day, different students just do well in different environments. Some really need the structure of in-person classes, while others prefer the freedom that online learning gives them. Universities should totally offer more options, depending on the course and what students actually need.

Speaker 2

I totally agree with that. For me, just being on campus, even for a few days a week, makes a huge difference to my motivation and how much I get involved. It's hard to beat that feeling of being part of a really lively university community, you know?

30. #23158 Debate on AI 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Two students and a professor are discussing a debate they found interesting at university.

Speaker 1

I'm still thinking about that debate on AI in academic writing. I mean, the main point about things being real really stuck with me. If students can just get essays from AI, how do we know what they actually understand? It feels like it ruins the whole idea of showing what you know and how you can think for yourself.

Speaker 2

That's a really good point, Sarah. I saw a lot of students agreeing with that. But I think the debate also showed how AI could be a useful tool, not just a shortcut. Like, for people who don't speak English as their first language, or those with learning difficulties, it could be a really good grammar checker or a brainstorming partner. So, it could make things fairer in some ways.

Speaker 3

I agree with Professor Roger on that. The point about making things easier for everyone was really strong. I also thought the idea about AI giving you more time for deeper research was interesting. If you're not spending ages on basic sentences, you could really get into more complex analysis, couldn't you?

Speaker 1

But that's where I get a bit stuck, Aria. If students aren't doing the hard work of putting sentences together or finding the right words, are they really learning to communicate well? It feels like we're getting someone else to do the very process that helps us think critically. I worry it could make people lazy thinkers.

Speaker 2

I get that worry, Sarah. It's a real problem for teachers. Maybe the answer isn't to just ban AI, but to change our assignments. We could get students to do more original research, or come up with unique arguments that AI can't just make up. Or even have them look at AI-made content and say what's good or bad about it. That would actually help them learn to think critically about things.

Speaker 3

That makes a lot of sense, Professor. Like, in my history class, we're already doing oral presentations and debates. AI can't really help with talking and thinking on the spot. Maybe assignments should move towards things where you have to put ideas together and think originally right away, instead of just written essays.

Speaker 1

That sounds good, but I'm still wondering about the practical side. How would professors tell the difference between using AI in a good way and just outright cheating? And what about students who can't afford to pay for good AI tools? It could create a new kind of unfairness with technology.

Speaker 2

Those are big problems, Sarah, and the debate definitely didn't have easy answers. It's a talk we'll need to keep having as technology changes. Universities will need clear rules, and we'll have to think about making sure everyone has fair access to these tools if we expect students to use them correctly.

Speaker 3

Exactly. What I think is most important is that it's not really about 'if' AI is used, but 'how' it's used. We can't stop it now, so we just need to figure out how to use it in a good way. It's definitely going to change how we learn and how we're taught.

Three students are talking about finding a job after graduation.

Speaker 1:

Hey guys, have you thought about what you want to do after graduation? I've been researching job opportunities, and I'm leaning toward joining a big company. The structured training programs they offer seem really valuable for professional development, not to mention the clear promotion paths. I think starting in a well-established organization could really set the foundation for a successful career.

Speaker 2:

That's interesting! I've actually been volunteering at a small charity organization, and I've really enjoyed the experience. For me, success isn't about climbing the corporate ladder or earning a high salary. I find the work meaningful, and the environment is so supportive. I might even consider staying in the non-profit sector after graduation.

Speaker 3:

Wow, you both already have such clear plans! I'm still figuring things out. To be honest, I'm thinking about staying here to pursue a postgraduate degree. I feel like I have time to explore my options, and further study might help me narrow down what I really want to do.

Speaker 1:

That's fair, but it's still good to start planning early. Maybe you could try out different jobs or internships while you're studying? That way, you can get a sense of what you enjoy or what you're good at before committing to a specific path.

Speaker 2:

I agree! Keeping an open mind and gaining diverse experiences can be really helpful. What you do now doesn't have to define your future career—it's more about exploring and learning about yourself. Plus, you might discover unexpected passions along the way.

Speaker 1

Guys, I'm really struggling with this essay. It's so much more difficult than high school, and I have no idea where to start. It's just overwhelming.

Speaker 2

Hey, don't worry too much about it. The first thing you should do is to make sure you understand the question. Trying to write without a clear idea of what you're supposed to be discussing will just make things harder.

Speaker 3

Yeah. You don't need to start by writing the summary or introduction. Just start with the main content first. Get all your ideas down, and then you can organize them into a logical order later.

Speaker 2

That's true. Once you have your main points, you can write a draft and then go back and revise. You might find it easier to write the summary once you've done that. And don't forget, we're here to help, too. We can proofread your draft and give you some feedback.

Speaker 1

That sounds like a good plan. I feel much better about this now.

Speaker 3

The writing center on campus is also a great resource. They can help you brainstorm ideas and even review your essay before you submit it.

Speaker 2

Exactly, don't hesitate to use the resources available to you. And take breaks too when you find yourself stuck. Sometimes stepping away for a bit can help clear your mind and give you a fresh perspective.

Speaker 1

Yeah, you guys make a lot of sense. I'll start by understanding the question and then move on from there. And I'll definitely use the writing center's help, too. Thank you so much!

Speaker 3

You're welcome! Just remember to take it one step at a time. Writing an essay doesn't have to be a huge, insurmountable task. You're capable of breaking it down and conquering it, piece by piece.

疑似原文

Three students are discussing how to celebrate the Department's 10th Anniversary party.

Speaker 1:

For our department's 10th anniversary, I think we should book that Greek restaurant downtown. It has excellent reviews, and the atmosphere would be perfect for a special celebration. We deserve something memorable after a decade of hard work!

Speaker 2:

I understand the appeal, but that restaurant is quite expensive, and it's far from campus. Many colleagues might find it inconvenient to travel there after work. Why don't we host it on campus instead? It would be more budget-friendly and accessible for everyone.

Speaker 1:

Not the Mathematics Building restaurant, though—the space is too cramped, and the decor is so dull. It wouldn't feel like a proper celebration there.

Speaker 3:

What about the Business Building's private event room? It's spacious, recently renovated, and we can arrange catering. It's a good compromise—still on campus but more upscale than our department's facilities.

Speaker 2:

That's a practical suggestion. Now, how many people should we invite? Initially, I thought just faculty members, but with only 15 of us, it might feel too small.

Speaker 1:

We could include some of our first graduating students! They were part of our department's early years, and it would be meaningful to have them join.

Three students are discussing how to improve presentation skills.

Speaker 1:

I have a major presentation next week and I'm really struggling. I always rely too much on my notes, and when I try to speak without them, I panic. What would you recommend as the most effective way to improve?

Speaker 2:

The key is progressive practice. First, record yourself presenting alone to get comfortable with the content. Then practice in front of a friend - I'd be happy to help. For notes, use just keywords instead of full sentences. This forces you to actually understand the material rather than just read it.

Speaker 3:

I'd add two techniques: First, focus on objects at the back of the room instead of direct eye contact if you're nervous. Second, prepare 'rescue phrases' like 'Let me rephrase that' to recover if you lose your train of thought. Remember, the audience wants you to succeed.

Speaker 1:

Those are all great suggestions. I'll start by rewriting my notes with keywords tonight, then record myself tomorrow. Would you be available Thursday for a practice session?

Speaker 2:

Absolutely. And don't aim for perfection - even experienced presenters make mistakes. What matters is how you handle them.

Speaker 3:

Exactly. Focus on delivering your message clearly rather than memorizing every word. You'll do fine.

Lately, when I' ve been working on my assignments, I find it really hard to organize everything. I feel a lot of pressure, and even when I try to write a goal, I just cannot stick to it. Do you guys ever deal with this situation? How do you usually cope?

Speaker 2:

Oh, I totally get you. I' ve been there. What helped me before was breaking those lengthy assignments into smaller ones. For example, if the due date is still pretty long, I' ll first make a plan, then create an outline, and finally schedule everything step by step.

Speaker 3:

Yeah, I do something similar, pretty much the same approach. And if I have different assignments at the same time, I try to allocate different amounts of time to each one, depending on how urgent or difficult they are.

Speaker 1:

I' ve actually tried to do that too, but the problem is I never do it consistently.

Speaker 2:

That' s the tricky part. If you let yourself get distracted, the whole thing will take longer. You really need to avoid things like mobile phones, TV, emails, and just try to focus. By the way, do you two have a specific time for study? Like a fixed routine, maybe in the morning or evening?

Speaker 3:

For me, I work best at night. Of course, everyone is different, but I think the most important thing is to study when you feel the most productive. Personally, I usually write essays in the evening after dinner, so that' s when I focus.

Speaker 1:

Hmm, I' m still not sure what works best for me. But I think the most important thing is to have a work buddy.

36. #23147 Online Classes 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Three students are discussing the pros and cons of online classes.

Speaker 1:

I really can't stand online classes. Last week during my economics lecture, I kept getting distracted by my phone and ended up missing half the content. And when I tried to ask a question in the chat, the professor didn't see it until the next day!

Speaker 2:

Actually, I prefer online learning. Think about it - no more rushing to catch the 8am bus, no spending money on cafeteria food, and I can attend class in my pajamas. I just open my notebook and focus on taking notes. The recorded lectures are great too - I can rewatch difficult parts anytime.

Speaker 3:

But that's exactly the problem! I chose this university for the campus experience. How am I supposed to make friends or network if we're all just little boxes on a screen? And when I type a question, by the time the professor responds, we've already moved on to another topic.

Speaker 1:

Exactly! In physical classes, I can just raise my hand and get immediate answers. Plus, group discussions are so much more engaging in person. Online breakout rooms always feel awkward and unproductive.

Speaker 2:

I get your point about socializing, but consider the flexibility. I can review lecture recordings while eating dinner, or study in my comfortable room instead of those hard library chairs. And honestly, I find I actually participate more online - I'm too shy to speak up in big lecture halls.

Speaker 3:

That might work for you, but I learn better through face-to-face interactions. Body language and classroom energy help me understand the material. Last semester I failed a course because the online format just didn't work for my learning style.

Speaker 1:

Same here! At least in physical classes, the professor can see when students look confused. Online, they just keep lecturing to blank screens. Maybe a hybrid system would be better - some online, some in-person classes?

Speaker 2:

That could be a good compromise. We'd get the benefits of both formats. Though I'd still prefer fully online - it saves me nearly two hours of commuting every day.

Speaker 3:

Well, I'd take hybrid over fully online any day. At least that way I could still get some of the campus experience. But honestly, I think education should be primarily in-person - that's what university is all about, right?

Speaker 1:

Agreed. Maybe the solution is offering both options and letting students choose what works best for them.

37. #23126 Noisy Neighbours 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Three students are discussing dealing with noisy neighbours in the dorm at university.

Speaker 1

Honestly, I'm just so fed up with my neighbours. They're always playing loud music and having people over, even on weeknights when I'm trying to study. It's really hard for me to focus, and I'm not really sleeping well. I just don't know what to do anymore.

Speaker 2

That sounds rough, Charlotte. Have you tried talking to them directly? Sometimes just knocking on the door and having a quick chat can really help. I had a similar problem last semester, and just asking them to turn it down at certain times actually worked for a bit.

Speaker 3

Yeah, I agree talking to them is the first thing to try. But it doesn't always work, especially if they're not very thoughtful. If that doesn't work, you could always talk to your Resident Advisor, your RA. They're there to help with these kinds of things and can make sure people follow the dorm quiet hours. That's usually the official next step.

Speaker 2

Yeah, going to the RA is an option, but from my experience, they can be kind of hit or miss. Some RAs are really good about it, but others just send a general email and nothing happens. Personally, I've just found it easier to get good noise-cancelling headphones or just go to the library when it gets too loud. It's not perfect, but it does give you some control back.

Speaker 1

I appreciate the suggestions, George, but why should I have to leave my own room or wear headphones all the time? This is my living space, and I pay good money for it. It just feels unfair that I'm the one who has to change just because my neighbours are being inconsiderate. It's really tiring and making it hard to feel relaxed here.

Speaker 3

Charlotte's right, it's not fair to expect you to keep moving. Most dorms have very clear quiet hours, especially after 10 PM. If the RA isn't helping, you might need to take it higher, like to the Housing Office or the Resident Director. There are usually official ways to complain about ongoing problems, and that's when they might actually do something.

Speaker 2

That's a good point about the official procedures. I guess if it's affecting your studies and well-being this much, it's worth trying the official route. As a last resort, if nothing else works, have you thought about asking for a room change? It's a pain, but sometimes a fresh start is the only way to get some peace.

Speaker 1

A room change feels pretty drastic, but I might have to think about it if nothing else gets better. I really wish they would enforce the rules more, or maybe have clearer consequences. Maybe if a few of us on the floor reported them, it would be taken more seriously?

Speaker 3

Definitely. A group complaint often matters more than just one person complaining. Living in a dorm should be a good place for learning, not a constant source of stress. It's important to stand up for your right to a peaceful living space, especially with exams coming up.

Speaker 1

Frustrated with loud neighbors disrupting study and sleep.

Feels it's unfair she has to adapt (using headphones or leaving room) when neighbors are inconsiderate.

Considering a room change if the situation doesn't improve.

Speaker 2

Suggests talking directly to neighbors first to ask them to lower noise.

Recommends involving the RA if talking doesn't work, though acknowledges RAs can be inconsistent.

Personally copes by using noise-cancelling headphones or studying elsewhere.

Supports official complaints and, as a last resort, room changes.

Speaker 3

Agrees direct talk is the first step; if ineffective, escalate to RA or housing authorities.

Emphasizes using official complaint channels and involving more residents to strengthen the case.

Highlights that dorms should be conducive to studying and stresses the importance of standing up for a peaceful environment.

Speaker 1: Have you heard about the field trip next weekend? I' m a bit concerned because I have a part-time job and I have a shift that weekend. I might not be going.

Speaker 2: Yes, I' m definitely going. I heard that we are going to the Marina Hotel to learn a lot about hotel management and business knowledge. I am really excited and looking forward to it.

Speaker 3: I don' t think I' m going. I have a football match during that weekend. My teammate will be mad if I' m going, but besides, we can have a lot of hotels in the city, and we can also learn knowledge in the city.

Speaker 2: But the hotels in the city and beside the sea are quite different, so we can learn different things. Besides, I know that the historical department is going as well, so we can have a lot of social time and make a lot of friends. We don' t have many chances to get to know each other.

Speaker 1: Yes, you are right, so I am thinking about going. I might be able to change my shift with my boss, and I can save money before that weekend. I haven' t thought about meeting other people, that is very interesting. Yeah, I think I' m going.

39. #23111 Volunteering experiences 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Three students are talking about their volunteering experiences.

Speaker 1

Hey, everyone. I can't believe how quickly this semester is flying by. I've been super busy with my role as an orientation leader at the university. I have to invest time and effort in planning and organizing events for new students. The good part is that I get to meet so many new people and help them learn about university life, which is really fulfilling. On the downside, it can be a bit stressful, especially during orientation week, when everything needs to run smoothly. But it's worth it because it helps me develop my leadership and public speaking skills. What about you, Amy? How's volunteering at the library going?

Speaker 2

Well, it has its own set of challenges and rewards. I really enjoy the organizational aspect of it. I've gained valuable skills in cataloguing and event planning, and I feel like I'm giving something back to the community. But some of the tasks like putting books on shelves and data entry can get pretty boring. And standing for long periods isn't great either.

Speaker 3

I get that. Working at the animal shelter takes a lot of physical energy and time, which can sometimes be so tiring. But the best part is interacting with the animals, and knowing that I'm making a difference in their lives. But it can also be emotionally difficult, especially when you see animals who have been through a lot.

Speaker 1

It's clear you're passionate about what you do, Sam. One thing I found is that being an orientation leader has made me more adaptable. Every group of students is different, and you have to be ready to handle any situation that comes up. I think these skills will be invaluable in my future career.

Speaker 2 (Amy)

That's a great point, Alex. Volunteering at the library has definitely made me better at problem solving. Whenever someone needs help with finding a source of information in some specialist area, it's like a little puzzle that I have to solve. So I think it's made me more analytical and improved my problem solving skills, which will come in useful in practically any job I pursue in the future.

Speaker 3

It's interesting to hear how we've all developed different skills from our volunteering experiences. For me, the animal shelter work has made me much better at multitasking. There are always so many things happening at once, and you need to stay calm and collected. It's also taught me a lot about teamwork as we all need to work together to ensure the animals are well taken care of. And I get to work with a variety of personalities.

Speaker 1

Absolutely. I think volunteering, no matter where or what you do, involves a lot of teamwork. At the end of the day, it's about investing time and effort in something you're passionate about and gaining invaluable skills from it. Plus, it feels great to give back to the community.

Speaker 3

Let's just hope we'll be able to find time to do this next semester too. Managing my time around coursework and volunteering can be tricky.

Speaker 1: The people at the accommodation office wanted to know who is coming to live on campus next year. We've got to let them know for sure by next week. It sounds like most people are coming back. What are you guys going to do? Have you decided yet?

Speaker 2: Really? They need to know so soon, well. I have already decided, I am coming back next year. I think on-campus accommodation provides a better atmosphere for studying.

Speaker 3: Honestly, I've been considering living outside. I think I would prefer a bit more independence. Plus, I've found an affordable place that is pretty close to campus. Plus, I think living off-campus could be a good way to experience more of the city.

Speaker 2: Really, Emily? I hadn't heard you made a decision. That's interesting. Well, those are both good points, I'm kind of torn between the convenience of living on campus and the independence of living off-campus.

Speaker 3: Hey, why don't you make a list of pros and cons? That might help you in your decision-making. Or you could just flip a coin, Joe. But really, think about what will make your life easier and happier. Consider the cost, travel time, studies, and distractions in both scenarios.

Speaker 1: Interesting! I will keep these points in mind when submitting the response. Whatever the case, everyone needs to make up their mind by next week for sure.

41. #23105 Essay extension 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Three students are discussing whether they will ask their professor for more time to do an essay.

Speaker 1

Hey, how are things? Where are you two off to? Are you on your way to the library?

Speaker 2

Hi. Yeah, we're heading there now. I've got a mountain of work to do. I just found out the philosophy essays due tomorrow. Oh. I guess it's too late at this point to ask Professor Kim for more time. I've really messed up the dates. I don't know why I wrote next Monday in my diary. It's due tomorrow. I'll just have. To do the best I can in the limited time I've got. Are either of you getting an extension?

Speaker 1

No, I'm not. But it's going to be really tight. It's a mad rush as the deadline approaches, which is my classic way of getting things done, last minute as per usual. You'd think I'd learn my lesson, but I never seemed to plan ahead. It's always the way. What about you, Mel? You're always well organized. Have you done yours yet? I bet you've finished already.

Speaker 3

Well, actually, I asked Professor Kim for an extension and got an extra couple of days. I don't want to sound ungrateful, but I would have liked longer. I've got a load of assignments due all at once. Plus we're packing to move house. It's a juggle, to say the least, but I guess some professors are more understanding than others. Two days is better than nothing, I. Guess.

Speaker 1

Yeah. Hopefully you'll get through everything in time with the extra days. Can you get an extension for some of your other work. You've got loads on your plate. It sounds pretty overwhelming.

Speaker 3

No. My other professor is normally really flexible, but she's going to be going away soon, so I have to get that assignment done for her before she leaves for her sabbatical. Honestly, I just need to put my head down and get working, and I'm pretty confident I'll be able to do it. It might not be my best work, but you know what? It's better than not handing anything in.

Speaker 2

Yeah, definitely. You know, I reckon getting an extension can sometimes just prolong the pain. It only drags it out, but in the end it's still got to be done. We might as well just push through and get on with it, and somehow we'll make it happen. One thing's for sure, I won't be able to watch the football tonight.

Speaker 3

No, I don't think any of us will be watching the game. I guess it's good to know. Most people seem to be in the same boat as we are.

42. #23101 Student exchange program 高频 机经题

疑似原文

Two students and a student services officer are discussing applying for a student exchange program at university.

Speaker1: I'm really excited about applying for the exchange program, but honestly, it feels like such a huge amount of work. The application website itself looks a bit overwhelming, and I'm worried I'll miss some important deadlines, Have you two already started looking into it seriously?

Speaker2: It definitely can seem like a lot at first, Alice, but don't worry, that's what we're here for. The application process has lots of steps, but it's pretty manageable once you break it down. We've got clear checklists and info sessions to help you through every step, especially with deadlines.

Speaker3: Yeah, I' ve started poking around, and what's really getting me is trying to pick a place. There are so many amazing universities, and I' m torn between a good academic fit for my major and somewhere I' d really love to experience culturally. How do you even narrow it down when there are so many choices?

Speaker1: That's exactly it, Charlotte! I'm struggling with the same thing. I'd love to go somewhere in Asia for the cultural experience, but I also need to make sure the courses I take abroad will actually count for my degree here. How easy is the credit transfer process, Will?

Speaker2: That's a very common concern, and it's really important to get that right. We have specific agreements with most partner universities, so we can tell you exactly which courses will transfer, you'll need to work closely with your academic advisor to get your course selections approved beforehand, but we can help you with those discussions too.

Speaker3: Okay, that' s good to know about the academic side. My biggest worry is actually the financial side, living abroad for a semester or a year sounds amazing, but the cost of living, fights, and tuition for some places just seems super expensive, Are there any scholarships specifically for exchange students that we should know about?

Speaker1:I was just about to ask about funding too! It's one thing to budget for a holiday, but a whole semester's living expenses in a new country is a totally different situation, I' ve heard stories about students struggling financially, and I really don't want to only rely on my parents.

Speaker2: Absolutely, financial planning is really important, and we have several options. The university offers a number of scholarships and bursaries specifically for exchange students, and we can also point you towards external grant, We'd suggest you apply for these as early as you can, as they can really help with the costs and make the experience much more achievable.

Speaker3: That's really reassuring, Will. I thought it might be completely out of reach, but knowing there's support for both the academic and financial side makes it feel much more achievable., 'm excited about the personal growth and independence 'd gain from it 'l definitely come by your office next week to talk through the details!
